

<http://www.dailymail.co.uk>

My mother-in-law sent me back from heaven: Man claims he was heading towards the light after suffering massive heart attack before dead relative intervened

Brian Miller's heart suddenly stopped beating for 45 minutes in hospital
He said was walking along a path to heaven when he saw his mother-in-law
She and her dead husband Jack waved and told him to go back to his body
Then his heart suddenly started beating again leaving doctors astonished

By EMILY ALLEN

PUBLISHED: 19 February 2014

A man has described his near death experience where he was ordered back to earth from heaven by his dead mother-in-law after suffering a massive heart attack.

Delivery driver Brian Miller, from Ohio, U.S. suffered a massive cardiac arrest while at work but seemed to be recovering in hospital when his heart suddenly stopped beating for 45 minutes.

Doctors at University Hospitals Ahuja Medical Center desperately tried to revive the 41-year-old, shocking him four times while he lay on the brink of death.

Brian Miller, from Ohio, U.S. suffered a cardiac arrest but seemed to be recovering in hospital when his heart suddenly stopped beating for 45 minutes - and during this time he said he had a near-death experience

Survivor: Doctors at University Hospitals Ahuja Medical Center desperately tried to revive the 41-year-old, shocking him four times while he lay on the brink of death

Mr Miller said his mother-in-law Kay appeared alongside his father-in-law, who is also dead, and waved to him

But as doctors feared the worst, out-of-the-blue his heart began beating normally again. Amazingly, he had not suffered any brain damage or loss of any bodily functions.

Why can you remember your dreams? Researchers uncover why...

'Mum's letting me go': Bucket-list boy, 11, battling cancer...

Now Mr Miller has recalled how he saw a white light, and said he was walking towards heaven along a path covered in flowers before being told by his recently deceased mother-in-law that he had to return to his body.

Mr Miller said his mother-in-law Kay appeared alongside his father-in-law Jack, who is also dead, and waved to him telling him he still had 'things to go down and do'.

Mr Miller appeared to be recovering from his heart attack when he took a turn for the worst. This chart shows how his heart rhythm went into a deadly arrhythmia

The father-of-three said: 'The only thing I remember, I started seeing a light and started walking towards the light. She was the most beautiful thing when I seen her. It was like the first day I met her. And looked so happy.'

Mr Miller added: 'She grabbed a hold of my arm and she told me, 'It's not your time, you don't need to be here ... you've got things to go down and do.'

Emily Bishop, a nurse at the hospital who helped care for Mr Miller, said recalled the moment his heart stopped beating and then started again, describing the experience as 'awesome'.

She told WJW-TV: 'His brain had no oxygen for 45 minutes, so the fact that he is up walking, talking, everything — I mean that's amazing.'

Mr Miller said the experience has changed his views on life after death and is convinced in an afterlife which he said people need to believe in.

Brian Miller near death experience

Emily Bishop, a nurse at the hospital (pictured) who helped care for Mr Miller, said recalled the moment his heart stopped beating and then started again, describing the experience as 'awesome'